If your child lives with a disability or has suffered from a serious injury or illness, the emotional and physical impact can be life-changing. We're here to help you access the best medical care, rehabilitation and support.

If you believe there may be a medical cause for your child's disability, serious injury or illness, then we're here to investigate your case. We'll also assess how this has impacted your lives and look into the support that's needed now and in the future. Early compensation payments may be available if you're out of work to care for your child, if your child needs immediate treatment or adjustments are required to your family home.

We'll offer guidance on educational, social and medical rights, to help your child live a fulfilling and happy life. We also have close relationships with organisations and charities that can offer you and your family further support.

I felt I really had someone fighting my corner. Fingers crossed I don't need to make another injury claim, but if I ever did I'd go straight to Irwin Mitchell.

Your team of experts

We've supported families with children who have disabilities, illnesses and serious injuries for many years. By building a relationship based on openness, trust and honesty, we're best placed to provide the expert advice you need.

We understand how concerned you may be about the level of care and support your child has or is receiving and can offer help and advice every step of the way. All families should have access to the right legal support to ensure a child's needs are addressed – there should be no exceptions.

We pride ourselves on offering you the highest quality legal advice and are here to help whenever you need us.

Disability and educational rights

Your child's rights should be upheld by those around them, particularly those providing their care, support and education.

If you don't feel that this is the case then we can help with:

Community care services – helping you get all the care and support you need for your child

Continuing healthcare – ensuring your child receives the healthcare they need to live in their community on their return from hospital

Education – guaranteeing your child the education they deserve.

Care and support

The effect of caring for a disabled child shouldn't be underestimated. Everyday tasks can appear daunting and unmanageable, especially in the early months.

You may need guidance on how to approach social services to obtain the care and support your child needs in both the short and long term. Alternatively, you may need someone to act as an advocate on your behalf to make sure your child receives the care that will fully meet their needs.

If your child's in need of longer term care or support, your local social services department or Clinical Commissioning

Group (CCG) can be contacted to carry out an assessment and provide a care plan detailing the support they feel would assist your child.

On occasions the care assessment team may fail to recognise the extent of your child's individual needs. If that happens, we can help you challenge the assessment and funding your child receives to ensure they have access to the services they're entitled to.

Our specialist Public Law & Human Rights team has a wealth of experience in providing advice and assistance about community and healthcare law.

Education, health and care plans

Statements of Special Educational Needs (SEN) for children in schools and young people in further education have been replaced with a single combined Education, Health and Care (EHC) plan.

An EHC plan is for children and young people from birth, up to the age of 25. This extends the current age of eligibility for those with a statement of SEN, and still in education, from 16 to 25. EHC plans include information about health, social care and educational needs and must be prepared and maintained by the local authority, including annual reviews and re-assessments.

Everyone deserves the right to a good education, whether this is specialist teaching, therapy or one-to-one assistance.

You may need help with:

Obtaining an EHC plan of a child's educational, health and care needs (formerly known as a SEN)

Refusals to issue an EHC plan, or challenging the content of an EHC plan

Refusals to reassess a child's educational, health and care needs

Decisions not to maintain or to cancel a child's EHC plan

Appealing an EHC plan, including representation at tribunals

Refusal to allow your child access to your preferred school or nursery.

Medical law and negligence

Medical treatment in the UK is generally of a high standard, but there are occasions where an unacceptable standard of medical care occurs.

When this happens during or after a child's birth, it can leave families having to cope with lifelong disabilities and on-going complex care needs. Everyone naturally wants answers, as well comfort in knowing that lessons have been learnt and the same mistakes will be avoided in the future.

It may be that the hospital poorly managed your pregnancy or the birth of your child. They could have failed to reach the correct diagnosis in time, ignore or delayed commencing necessary treatment. Your child's GP could have failed to pick up the early stages of an illness and delayed your child's referral to a hospital for treatment, which lead to a worsening of their symptoms and potentially, a permanent injury.

If your treatment was provided by the NHS, a private hospital or by your GP then you may be able to bring forward a formal complaint, as well as a claim for compensation. The legal investigation process requires information to be gathered. This usually involves obtaining medical records and seeking independent evidence from expert medical practitioners.

Compensation isn't a windfall. It's a way of providing financial support to look after your child and their ongoing care, specialist aids, equipment, educational and rehabilitation needs.

If your child has ongoing treatment at the hospital or with the clinicians where the negligence occurred, this shouldn't stop you from investigating a claim. The hospital clinicians continue to have a duty of care to provide the best treatment and care to your child.

Support after a Birth Injury

From years of experience working with families who have suffered pregnancy and childbirth problems, we understand how difficult it can be.

If you're concerned about the standard of medical treatment your child received, there are steps we can take to find answers for you and your family.

We can offer legal support and guidance for:

Ante-natal errors – despite highly advanced scans, medical professionals can miss or even misdiagnose problems during pregnancy. Errors made at this stage can have consequences, including misdiagnosed miscarriage, major unexpected conditions or stillbirth.

Errors during birth – damage from medical instruments, anaesthetics or inadequate care can cause serious gynaecological damage to mothers and injuries to babies including cerebral palsy, brachial palsy (Erb's palsy), brain injury, facial paralysis, spinal injury, fractured bones and perinatal asphyxia.

Support after a Personal Injury

Children have accidents on a regular basis but fortunately these are usually little bumps or minor mishaps that we all associate with growing up.

There's a duty to take extra care when dealing with children. If a child is injured at school, or when out and about, it might be that the accident is someone else's fault. If someone has failed to do something they should, or not acted in a proper and professional manner, there may be a claim for compensation.

When a child is injured, any claim for compensation should be dealt with by a specialist. Accidents and injuries can be complex, and different considerations apply when investigating and pursuing a claim involving a child.

It's important that you have specialist support to ensure your child has access to the right sort of treatment and rehabilitation to make their long term future as secure and fulfilling as it can be.

Criminal injuries

If your child's injury is the result of abuse or a crime, you can make a claim from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA).

The CICA is a government body created to compensate innocent victims of crime, it investigates claims by gathering witness statements, police reports and any other relevant documents.

Sometimes the CICA may decline or make an inadequate offer of compensation. If this happens, our personal injury specialists can advise you on the possibilities of seeking a review of the decision.

Road Traffic Collisions

There are many myths about when there is, and isn't, a claim for a road traffic collision, which can often lead to confusion at a time when clarity is needed.

When a child walks or runs into the road and is knocked down by a car, the police will often tell parents that the collision was unavoidable, or that it was the child's fault for running into the road. The police investigate what has happened from a criminal perspective, which is very different to what needs to be considered for a personal injury compensation claim. The police may not prosecute the driver, but that doesn't mean there isn't a claim for compensation.

Many people believe that if a child's injured, and they're not wearing a seatbelt or in a suitable child seat, then you can't make a claim. This isn't the case.

Families also worry about making a claim when a child's injured in a car being driven by a parent or family member. While it can feel uncomfortable making a claim against a relative, it's the driver's insurance company that deals with the claim on their behalf.

Finally, it's often assumed that a claim can't be made if a driver isn't insured, but these cases can succeed, and it's rare that there isn't a case.

Irwin Mitchell came recommended to us as the best in the country and they really lived up to that expectation.

Support and rehabilitation services

When it comes to a serious injury or disability, families often need practical help and advice to pursue a legal claim.

You may find yourself dealing with a wide range of unfamiliar services such as hospitals, social services, rehabilitation units and the benefits agency.

It can be overwhelming and difficult to understand the function of each service and how best to communicate with each organisation. Our Client Liaison team can help you and your family make sense of these services for the benefit of your child.

Our approachable team can assist with:

Assessment of immediate and longer term needs of your child

Highlighting areas of need and co-ordinating appropriate services and support for your family

Support and education for your family when considering your child's lifestyle as a consequence of their injury or disability

Liaising with local services, professionals and agencies about your child's immediate care and longer term needs

Practical support with day-to-day issues, such as budgeting, useful coping strategies and support with your child's ongoing rehabilitation

Monitoring the progress of rehabilitation to maintain a consistent and co-ordinated approach

Advice and assistance with benefit applications, reviews and appeals.

Protecting your child's future

If your child's suffered an injury or illness then supporting them financially, both now and in the future, will be of critical importance.

Whether you've already received compensation, or may do soon, we're here to help you look after any money you receive.

Making a Will

Research suggests that more than two-thirds of people in the UK don't have a Will. Many people believe that they're too young to make a Will, or don't think they have enough money or property to make writing a Will worthwhile. But it shouldn't be viewed like this.

Preparing a Will can be a positive step. It makes things easier for your loved ones at a very difficult time, particularly if you have a child with a disability or permanent injury.

A Will removes any doubt about how your assets will be distributed, who you wish to look after your children and how you'd like your affairs to be handled.

For children who have a disability, a Will can be created to:

- Provide for your child in a way that won't affect their benefits and or put them at risk by dishonest people
- Ensure that your children inherit from you even if your spouse remarries
- Appoint a guardian to care for your children if they were to be orphaned
- Reduce the amount of inheritance tax paid
- Make sure that your loved ones receive all the money and property you want them to receive.

Statutory Wills

If your child receives compensation and doesn't have the capacity to make a Will, a Statutory Will should be considered once they're 18 years old.

If you're acting as a Deputy or Attorney of a loved ones' estate, you may be involved in the process of creating a Statutory Will. These types of Wills can be complex, but we can help you every step of the way.

To make a Statutory Will on behalf of your child, you need to complete an application form and a statement to be considered by the Court of Protection. A decision is made by them as to whether the proposed Will is appropriate.

Our Court of Protection team can help with services, including Deputyships, Compensation Management, Trusts (for children as well as adults), Lasting Powers of Attorney and Statutory Wills.

Court of Protection

If your child has grown up and isn't able to manage their own affairs, you may need to seek legal support to ensure their finances and other important decisions are managed by a Court of Protection appointed Deputy.

The Court of Protection is the legal body responsible for making decisions about the management of the finances and health and welfare matters for people who lack the mental capacity to do so themselves.

We can support you if:

There's a dispute about what social care, residence or medical treatment is in your child's best interests

You're concerned about the ability of someone else to manage your child's affairs

You're responsible for managing your disabled child's affairs.

Personal Injury Trusts

If your child's been awarded compensation you may find that they're no longer eligible for certain means tested benefits or funding when they reach adulthood.

To make sure that the compensation isn't taken into account when deciding whether your child's eligible for means tested benefits, and to protect your child's future, you may be able to place the money in a Personal Injury Trust when your child reaches 18.

A court may consider authorising a Trust on the child's behalf before they reach the age of 18. They'd have to be satisfied that it's in the child's best interests to do so.

Money held in a Personal Injury Trust can be accessed by trustees. There needs to be at least two trustees for a Trust to be set up. These could be the child's parent and solicitor. If your child is under 18 and a Trust is required, then one of the trustees would have to be a solicitor. Our Client Liaison team can help you and your family make sense of these services for the benefit of your child.

Irwin Mitchell were recommended because of their legal reputation and they were simply brilliant. What made the biggest difference to us was their kindness, care and understanding throughout.
