YOUR Venue

OUR HISTORY

Frimley Hall was designed and built in 1882 by Mr G W Fowler. Once built, Mr Fowler sold it to Mr J F Wright, whose fortune and fame came from the manufacture of domestic boilers and soap; more famously known as Wright's Coal Tar Soap, which is still in use today. His wife, formally Miss Avery, came from the family who had manufactured Avery Scales, which were soon to belong to many households in the country.

Frimley Hall was later sold to the Spears family a few years before the Second World War who specialised in converting old timber buildings to modern usage without destroying the buildings character. This was when Frimley Hall became a hotel with the family in charge. This family also started the development of the local area and continued to construct Lime Avenue and Crawley Drive, although development came to a halt when the War commenced and Frimley Hall was commandeered by the British Army.

Although Frimley Hall has had several owners since then, and undergone some changes, the exterior of the front of the house remains much the same as the idea Mr Fowler had whilst building it, and during the years Mr Wright owned it in the 1920's.

Frimley Hall is a Victorian grade ll listed building, including its William Morris design wallpaper, and is one of the few remaining buildings of its size and age in the area.
