

The Courts for the Mobility of Future Generations

"The Courts for the Mobility of Future Generations" is a series of events we are launching that truly continues our Keoscopie observatory work at the heart of territories, aiming to move beyond preconceived ideas, invite everyone to express viewpoints, and feed reflections on the major mobility challenges of today and tomorrow.

These events will feature an original scenography in the format of a trial, with a prosecutor, a jury, an accusation and — most importantly — various witnesses called to the stand: experts who will shed light on these discussions, whether through recent research, experiments in France or abroad, to help advance thinking on the major issues related to today's and tomorrow's mobility.

The events are an opportunity to address diverse themes, for example: will electric mobility save the climate?

Can we do without cars outside cities?

Mobility for all?

Or the necessity (or not) of travelling in order to meet environmental sobriety targets.

Ousbek and Rica are supporting us in this series of events and will notably help pose questions beforehand to a wide audience through the SOS section on their website.
