Beauty, Pregnancy & Postpartum

Pregnancy and postpartum bring many beautiful changes, but also many changes women don't always expect. Hormonal shifts can affect the skin, facial fullness, pigmentation, and overall appearance in ways that may feel noticeable and unfamiliar.

At That Face Facial Plastic Surgery, we believe education is just as important as treatment. Pregnancy and postpartum can bring many temporary changes to the face and skin, and understanding what is normal, what may improve over time, and when to consider treatment can help patients feel more informed and supported throughout the process.

The “Pregnancy Glow” and some extras...

While some women experience brighter, fuller skin during pregnancy, others notice:

 Melasma or dark patches	 Increased facial swelling or puffiness
 Acne flare-ups	 Skin sensitivity
 Dryness or texture changes	 Changes in facial fullness or under-eyes

These changes are often temporary and related to hormones, circulation, and fluid retention.

Are Cosmetic Treatments Safe During Pregnancy?

Most cosmetic treatments are typically postponed during pregnancy and while breastfeeding.

This includes:

- Neurotoxin (Botox, Dysport, Xeomin)
- Dermal Fillers
- Laser treatments and chemical peels
- Facial Surgery

The reason is not necessarily because treatments are proven harmful, but because there is limited safety research involving pregnant patients. A conservative and safe approach is generally recommended.

Treatments Often Focus On Skin Support Instead

During pregnancy, many patients focus on maintaining healthy skin through:

Gentle skincare

Consistent sunscreen use

Hydration

Professional guidance for sensitive skin changes

Daily sunscreen becomes especially important, as pregnancy-related pigmentation can worsen with sun exposure.

The “Pregnancy Nose” Is Real

Hormonal changes and increased blood flow can sometimes cause temporary swelling of the nose during pregnancy, often referred to as “pregnancy nose.”

Some women notice the nose appears slightly wider, puffier, or more swollen throughout pregnancy.

For most women, this improves gradually after delivery as swelling and hormones normalize.

However, if changes persist postpartum or patients have longstanding cosmetic or breathing concerns, a consultation with Dr. Sulyman-Scott can help determine whether the changes are temporary or if treatment options may be appropriate.

Thinking About Treatments After Pregnancy?

After pregnancy, many women notice changes such as:

-  Tired or hollow under-eyes
-  Skin laxity
-  Persistent pigmentation
-  Volume loss
-  Texture irregularities

As the body recovers and hormones begin to stabilize, some concerns may improve naturally over time, while others may benefit from personalized treatment options later on.

Depending on the concern, treatment options may include medical-grade skincare, microneedling, laser rejuvenation, facial balancing, or surgical consultation after postpartum recovery.

We are happy to help guide patients toward safe, appropriate recommendations tailored to their stage of life and aesthetic goals.
