

Restoration

Some of life's greatest gifts are not about getting something new, but about restoring what has always been there. The most meaningful transformations honor who we are at our core. -Dr. Sulyman-Scott

Why Patients Love Facial Fat Transfer

Facial fat transfer, also known as facial fat grafting, is a surgical procedure that uses your body's own fat to restore facial volume. Fat is gently harvested from one area of the body, carefully processed, and strategically transferred to areas where volume has been lost.

Patients love fat grafting because it uses their own fat cells and can provide long-lasting, natural-looking rejuvenation.

Patients often seek fat grafting to restore volume in:

How Long Does Fat Grafting Last?

One of the most common questions we hear during consultations is:

"If I transfer fat to my face, will it eventually disappear?"

The answer is more nuanced than a simple yes or no. Once the transferred fat establishes a blood supply and successfully heals, those fat cells become living tissue in their new location. In other words, the fat that survives the healing process is generally considered long-lasting.

Understanding the Healing Process

Many patients worry their results have "gone away" when what they're actually seeing is a normal part of recovery.

Immediately after fat grafting, swelling creates extra fullness. As that swelling resolves over the first several weeks, the face naturally appears less full than it did right after surgery.

In addition, not every transferred fat cell survives. A portion of the fat is expected to be reabsorbed by the body during the healing process. This is completely normal and is one reason surgeons carefully plan how much volume to transfer.

For this reason, the appearance of the face during the first few months is not always representative of the final result.

When Are Results Considered Stable?

Fat transfer results continue to evolve during the first several months after treatment. By around six months, most of the healing has occurred and the surviving fat cells have established themselves in their new location.

At that point, the volume that remains is typically considered your long-term result.

Will I Ever Need More Fat?

Although the surviving fat cells can last for many years, they do not stop undergoing the natural aging process.

As we age, our skin changes, facial tissues shift, and natural volume loss continues. Sun exposure, smoking, weight fluctuations, stress, and genetics can all influence how the face ages over time.

Because of this, some patients may choose to have additional fat grafting years later, not because the original fat disappeared, but because the face continued to age naturally.
