

How Can History Help in Your Career?

Makes you a better presenter

Studying history will require you to present information both orally and visually, which is a very useful skill to have in many jobs.

Improves your critical thinking

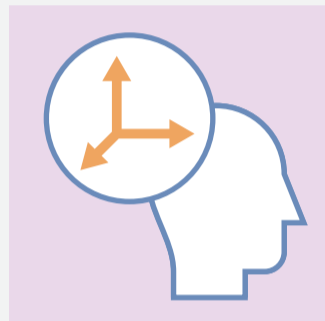

History will teach you that you cannot take things at face value & that you have to evaluate evidence to make your own decisions.

Helps you to think objectively

You will learn that there are many ways to approach problems and this will help you to approach new situations with an open mind.

Gives you perspective

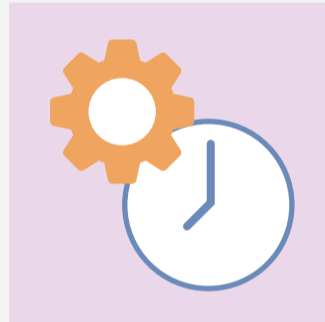

Studying history will give you a balanced perspective on what has happened in the past and what should happen in the future.

Make you a better communicator

Studying history will require you to write essays and take part in debates, developing your oral and written communication skills.

Develops time management skills

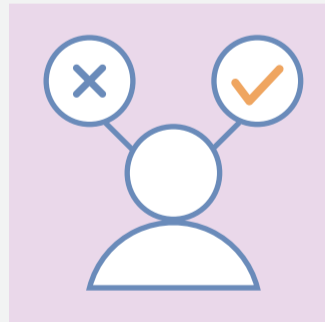

Studying history will help you develop time management skills that will allow you to work independently and prioritise effectively.

Turns you into a culture vulture

Part of studying history includes understanding cultural contexts - this will develop your interest & understanding of other cultures.

Makes you more decisive

History will teach you to gather and evaluate evidence effectively, helping you to make confident decisions quickly.

Develops your arguing skills

History will teach you to construct a clear argument, discuss ideas in groups, negotiate with others, question and summarise.

Help you earn a higher salary!

Studying history will help you develop all these sought-after skills and attributes, which could help you earn a higher salary!