

5 REASONS TO STUDY MUSIC

It will improve your time management

Music will require you to be good at managing your time, especially if you are part of an ensemble and need to fit practice and rehearsals around other commitments.

It will make you a better team player

If you perform as part of an ensemble, you will quickly understand the importance of working on your own performance while simultaneously working towards a shared goal. Even if performing as a soloist, you will regularly work with other performers.

It will make you a better problem solver

Music provides the opportunity for creativity and self-expression, which will help you develop the skills to find creative solutions to problems.

It will make you an independent learner

Even if you perform as part of an ensemble, as a musician you have to have the discipline to practice, rehearse and take ownership of your personal performance. You also have to learn how to take on feedback constructively.

It will make you a better communicator

Music will develop your non-verbal communication with others and will give you fantastic presentation skills – after all, presentations are just another performance!
