

Now's the time to implement Verizon Connect Reveal

Delay in purchasing a fleet management solution could come at a high cost for your business.

It might seem like waiting to purchase a fleet management solution could save you money. But the costs of not making this decision can quickly snowball, negatively impacting your bottom line.

Lack of operational efficiency

Opting not to set your business up with fleet management solutions can result in routing inconsistencies, reduced fleet visibility and productivity issues.

- Inaccurate routing leads to longer delivery times, higher fuel costs, and decreased driver productivity
- Without GPS-enabled visibility, it can be hard to keep up with where your vehicles are and how they're doing. It's also hard to make adjustments and decisions in real time
- Reduced productivity can lead to wasted time, inefficient workflows, and poor resource allocation

Increased risks to safety and liability

Not being able to track your drivers can lead to serious risks.

- Not knowing where your drivers are compromises their safety and increases your risk singular for accidents

- Lack of tracking and accountability can lead to higher insurance premiums
- Not being able to verify your drivers' activities or locations can potentially cause legal complications

Significant financial losses

Aside from risk and inefficiencies, there are possible financial implications, too.

- Inefficient routes and idling can waste significant fuel, which accounts for up to 40% of operational cost
- Not knowing exactly where your vehicles are could result in their potential misuse

A negative impact on customer service

With the potential for late deliveries and inaccurate ETAs, your customer service may suffer.

- Late deliveries and difficulty in providing accurate arrival times could result in customer dissatisfaction or even loss of business

The total cost of indecision

In the end, postponing your fleet management solution integration can do more than just cost you money. It can lead to inefficiencies, increased risk and missed opportunities for improved customer service. Investing in a fleet management solution is an investment in smoother business operations, safer work conditions and profitability.

Why Verizon Connect

As one of the largest commercial fleet management providers in the world, Verizon Connect provides a product and customer experience you won't find anywhere else.

- Decades of fleet industry and product experience
- A robust team of product engineers with significant research and development funding
- Access to partners and integrations to take your fleet solutions further

Find out how much you can save by implementing a fleet management solution with our Fleet Savings Calculator.

